Police Sexual Violence: Enacting Effective Laws

Police sexual violence (PSV) is a term that encompasses interactions in which a law enforcement officer (sometimes referred to as a peace officer) engages in sexual contact with someone they have encountered in the line of duty. Law enforcement officers are inherently in a position of authority over civilians, and this authority can be wielded to coerce unwanted sexual contact. The International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP) has recognized that policing “create[s] opportunities for sexual misconduct” because officers “have power and authority over others” and “engage with vulnerable populations who lack power and are often perceived as less credible”.¹ PSV is the second-most prevalent form of police violence behind excessive force, but because victims are often hesitant to report their experience, there are likely exponentially more cases than have been documented.²

States across the country have enacted laws to establish PSV as a crime either within or in addition to existing sexual assault laws. These laws vary in their scope – some include all forms of police interaction and some only apply when the victim is in custody; they take varying approaches to addressing consent; some states omit language identifying law enforcement, instead referring to anyone in a position of authority over the victim; some only apply to corrections officers; and some states do not explicitly prohibit PSV at all.

Examples of Strong PSV Laws

The most robust protections for victims of sexual assault by a law enforcement entity prohibit sexual contact by peace officers at any point in the line of duty, rather than only when the victim is in custody.

Vermont, Colorado, Maryland, and Arizona’s statutes are some of the most thorough in terms of covering a wide swath of police interactions. In 2023, Vermont amended its law to become the most robust in the country, specifically protecting people in law enforcement custody, as well as subjects, victims, and informants in investigations. The law provides that “no law enforcement officer shall engage in...sexual conduct with a person whom the officer is detaining, arresting, or otherwise holding in custody or who the officer knows is being detained, arrested, or otherwise held in custody by another law enforcement officer,” as well as “with a person whom the officer is investigating pursuant to an open investigation; knows is being investigated by another law enforcement officer pursuant to an open investigation; or knows is a victim or confidential informant in any open investigation.”³ Colorado’s law includes when “the peace officer contacts the victim for the purpose of law enforcement or contacts the victim in the exercise of the officer’s employment activities or duties”; “the peace officer knows that the victim is, or causes the victim to believe that he or she is the subject of an active investigation and the peace officer uses that knowledge to further sexual contact, intrusion, or penetration”; or when, “in furtherance of sexual contact, intrusion, or penetration, the peace officer makes any show of real or apparent authority”.⁴ Colorado’s law protects individuals from PSV during essentially any law enforcement interaction and also specifically prohibits peace officers from using their position of authority over the victim to coerce them into sexual contact. Maryland’s PSV statute is similarly thorough, prohibiting sexual contact with a person who is “a victim, witness, or suspect in an open investigation that the law enforcement officer is conducting, supervising, or assisting with”; “requesting assistance from or responding to the law enforcement officer in the course of the law enforcement officer’s official duties”; or “in the custody of the law enforcement officer.”⁵ Arizona’s law lists fewer scenarios, but is still one of the country’s stronger laws, prohibiting sexual conduct with people who are both in custody and subjects of investigations.⁶

Addressing Consent

Strong PSV laws also address consent, preventing an accused officer from using the defense that their victim consented to sexual contact. PSV laws are often referred to as closing a loophole in sexual assault laws - while sexual assault is a crime in every state, law enforcement officers can avoid assault allegations by claiming their victim consented to sexual contact. Someone who is being investigated in relation to a crime or is in police custody inherently cannot consent to sexual contact because the power dynamic between law enforcement and a citizen is in itself coercive.⁷ Law enforcement officers can wield their power over victims by threatening arrest or intimidating them into silence.⁸

In order to address the consent loophole, some states provide that consent of the victim cannot be a defense to prosecution under those states’ PSV laws. For example, Georgia’s statute contains a subsection that simply provides that “consent of the victim shall not be a defense to a prosecution under this Code section”.⁹ Other states instead define police sexual contact occurring during the line of duty as inherently non-consensual. For example, under Louisiana law, “a person is deemed incapable of consent when the person is under arrest or otherwise in the actual custody of a police officer or other law enforcement official and the offender is a police officer or other law enforcement official who either: (1) arrested the person or was responsible for maintaining the person in actual custody[; or,] (2) knows or reasonably should know that the person is under arrest or otherwise in actual custody”.¹⁰

The U.S. Congress passed the “Closing the Law Enforcement Consent Loophole Act” in 2022 which not only codified a new federal PSV law, but also created a grant system to incentivize states to pass laws that “make[] it a criminal offense for any person acting under color of law of the State to knowingly engage in a sexual act with an individual who is under arrest, in detention, or otherwise in the actual custody of any law enforcement officer; and prohibits a person charged with [that] offense ... from asserting the consent of the other individual as a defense.”¹¹ In order to receive federal funding, a state must have a law that prohibits custodial sexual assault and prevents the use of a consent defense. Currently, 21 of the 36 states with PSV statutes have some form of a consent provision.

Examples of Narrow PSV Laws

Many state laws only prohibit sexual contact where the victim is in some form of police custody. However, persons are vulnerable to sexual assault by police officers in any stage of police interaction — especially where an officer is able to coerce a victim using the threat of arrest, or where law enforcement is conducting an undercover investigation and the victim engages in sexual contact with an officer under false pretenses. In many states, the PSV law only addresses sexual contact where the victim was being detained by or in the custody of law enforcement. The definition of “custody” varies state to state. Washington’s statute reads that “a person is guilty of custodial sexual misconduct ... when the person has sexual intercourse with another person ... when the victim is being detained, under arrest, or in the custody of a law enforcement officer and the perpetrator is a law enforcement officer.”¹² Maine’s law has a broad definition of when someone is in custody: “under arrest, in custody or being interrogated or temporarily detained, including during a traffic stop or questioning pursuant to an investigation of a crime”¹³. This language is fairly comprehensive, but would be even more protective if it covered any interaction related to investigations versus only questioning. Alaska, on the other hand, doesn’t define custody: “An offender commits the crime of sexual assault in the third degree if the offender ... while employed in the state by a law enforcement agency as a peace officer, or while acting as a peace officer in the state, engages in sexual penetration with a person with reckless disregard that the person is in the custody or the apparent custody of the offender, or is committed to the custody of a law enforcement agency.”¹⁴

Examples of Weak PSV Laws

Even weaker laws only prohibit sexual assault by someone in a “position of authority” over the victim, failing to specifically enumerate peace officers as being in positions of authority can allow for prosecutorial interpretation that leaves victims of law enforcement sexual assault behind. For example, Wyoming’s sexual assault in the second degree statute has a subsection including situations in which “the actor is in a position of authority over the victim and uses this position of authority to cause the victim to submit.”¹⁵ Several states only have laws prohibiting sexual contact between corrections officers and inmates or parole officers and parolees, and others don’t create explicit protections from assault by law enforcement at all.

PSV Policy and Sex Work

Adult consensual sex workers and trafficked persons are especially vulnerable to police sexual violence for a number of reasons. The IACP noted in their Addressing Sexual Offenses and Misconduct by Law Enforcement Executive Guide that “predators select victims based on vulnerabilities and a perceived lack of credibility, and therefore, victimization is often higher among certain populations including ... individuals in prostitution and/or the commercial sex industry.”¹⁶ Law enforcement officers use the fear of arrest as a tool to coerce victims,¹⁷ and due to their engagement in a criminal activity, victims of PSV who are engaged in prostitution by choice or by coercion put themselves in danger of criminalization by reporting an experience with PSV. Additionally, police vice units frequently use raids and undercover work in their investigations of suspected prostitution. Undercover officers can and do engage in sexual conduct with the targets of their investigations, despite this being wholly unethical as well as unnecessary. This is an example of law enforcement exploiting their authority to needlessly engage in sexual contact with a subject of an investigation – while technically this interaction could have been consensual initially, the agreement is made under false pretenses which renders the sexual contact non-consensual. Illinois was the first state to pass legislation recognizing sex workers’ unique vulnerability to PSV. The “Prostitution Investigation Act” was enacted in March 2025. It requires all law enforcement agencies to create and publicly post a policy prohibiting officers from “knowingly and willingly performing an act of sexual penetration with the suspect of a criminal investigation of prostitution during the course of an investigation conducted by that officer.”¹⁸ Massachusetts is currently considering similar legislation¹⁹ after a December 2024 Department of Justice report found that the Worcester Police Department allowed officers to “violate the constitutional rights of women suspected of being involved in the commercial sex trade by engaging in sexual contact while undercover as part of official investigations.”²⁰

Recommendations

Statutory language differs in each state, creating varying degrees of protection, but ultimately every jurisdiction should create the most comprehensive laws possible to protect victims of sexual assault. The power imbalance between law enforcement officers and citizens is significant, making any sexual contact between the parties inherently coercive and non-consensual. The best police sexual violence laws will cover interactions in any form of law enforcement duties, including at initial contact and the investigatory stage, and they will also make clear that any sexual contact between a peace officer and someone they encounter during the line of duty is inherently non-consensual.

28-322.05. Sexual abuse of a detainee; penalty.

(1) For purposes of this section:

(a) Detainee means an individual who has been:

(i) Arrested by a person;

(ii) Detained by a person, regardless of whether the detainee has been arrested or charged; or

(iii) Placed into the custody of a person, regardless of whether the detainee has been arrested or charged;

(b) Law enforcement agency means an agency or department of this state or of any political subdivision of this state which is responsible for the prevention and detection of crime; the enforcement of the penal, traffic, or highway laws of this state or any political subdivision of this state; and the enforcement of arrest warrants. Law enforcement agency includes a police department, an office of the town marshal, an office of the county sheriff, the Nebraska State Patrol, and any department to which a deputy state sheriff is assigned as provided in section 84-106; and

(c) Person means an individual:

(i) Who is employed by a law enforcement agency, including an individual working under contract with the agency;

(ii) To whom the law enforcement agency has authorized or delegated authority to make arrests, to place a detainee in detention or custody, or to otherwise exercise control over a detainee or a detainee's activities; and

(iii) Who is not the spouse of a detainee.

²⁸This statute does not encompass all custodial interactions because it requires actual or constructive restraint of the victim by the perpetrator.

(2) A person commits the offense of sexual abuse of a detainee if the person engages in sexual penetration or sexual contact with a detainee. It is not a defense to a charge under this section that the detainee consented to such sexual penetration or sexual contact.

(3) An otherwise lawful pat-down or body cavity search by a person is not a violation of this section.

An Act Relative to Sexual Assault By a Police Officer

Status: Referred to Joint Committee on Public Safety and Homeland Security 2/27/25; Accompanied a study order 3/19/2026

SECTION 1. Section 13H½ of Chapter 265 of the General Laws, as appearing in the 2022 Official Edition, is hereby amended by inserting after the first sentence the following:-

For the purposes of this section, "control" shall include, but not be limited to, supervising a person under the age of 18 who is in a law enforcement training program; interacting with a person being questioned, investigated or detained; communicating the power to charge or arrest a person, whether explicitly or implicitly, regardless of whether such power could lawfully be exercised; or otherwise exercising or attempting to exercise coercion or influence while acting under color of law.

For the purposes of this section, "coercion" shall include, but not be limited to, threats of serious harm to or physical restraint against any person; any scheme, plan, or pattern intended to cause a person to believe that failure to perform an act would result in serious harm to or physical restraint against any person; or the abuse or threatened abuse of the legal process.

SECTION 2. Section 22 of said Chapter 265, as so appearing, is hereby amended by inserting after the first sentence the following:-

For the purposes of this subsection, "control" shall include, but not be limited to, supervising a person under the age of 18 who is in a law enforcement training program; interacting with a person being questioned, investigated or detained; communicating the power to charge or arrest a person, whether explicitly or implicitly, regardless of whether such power could lawfully be exercised; or otherwise exercising or attempting to exercise coercion or influence while acting under color of law.

For the purposes of this section, "coercion" shall include, but not be limited to, threats of serious harm to or physical restraint against any person; any scheme, plan, or pattern intended to cause a person to believe that failure to perform an act would result in serious harm to or physical restraint against any person; or the abuse or threatened abuse of the legal process.

SECTION 3. Each law enforcement agency shall create, within 180 from the passage of this bill, a policy that prohibits law enforcement officers from knowingly and willingly engaging in sexual contact with the suspect of a criminal investigation of prostitution during the course of an investigation conducted by that officer. The policy shall be posted and made publicly available.
